Discerning Critical Information

David Simpson 1997 "The increased attention to technologies for battle command has brought about an increased awareness of the importance of abilities and traits for leadership and tactical decision making. This study examined the relationship between conceptual capacity and the ability to discern critical information. Conceptual capacity was measured with a cognitive complexity method that used self report and clinical judgment. Critical information discernment was measured by instructors and trained observers during a Command and General Staff Officer College exercise (Prairie Warrior 96). Self and peer ratings were also collected on leadership skills, personality and attitudes, performance, and experience. No relationship was found between the primary measure of the current level of conceptual capacity and CID; however, a Biodata cognitive complexity measure was negatively correlated to CID. About 50% of the variance in CID performance was explained by seven variables. Variables that contributed positively were analytic style, % of position in the exercise, and whether performance was expected to apply to their next assignment. Negatively weighted factors were openness, object orientation, staying alert for unusual information, and feeling time pressured."--DTIC.

Assessing Writing to Support Learning Sandra Murphy 2022-11-08 In this book, authors Murphy and O'Neill propose a new way forward, moving away from high-stakes, test-based writing assessment and the curriculum it generates and toward an approach to assessment that centers on student learning and success. Reviewing the landscape of writing assessment and existing research-based theories on writing, the authors demonstrate how a test-based approach to accountability and current practices have undermined effective teaching and learning of writing. This book bridges the gap between real-world writing that takes place in schools, college, and careers and the writing that students are asked to do in standardized writing assessments to offer a new ecological approach to writing assessment. Murphy and O'Neill's new way forward turns accountability inside out to help teachers understand the role of formative assessments and assessment as inquiry. It also brings the outside in, by bridging the gap between authentic writing and writing assessment. Through these two strands, readers learn how assessment systems can be restructured to become better aligned with contemporary understandings of writing and with best practices in teaching. With examples of assessments from elementary school through college, chapters include guidance on designing assessments to address multiple kinds of writing, integrate reading with writing, and incorporate digital technology and multimodality. Emphasizing the central role that teachers play in systemic reform, the authors offer sample assessments developed with intensive teacher involvement that support learning and provide information for the evaluation of programs and schools. This book is an essential resource for graduate students, instructors, scholars and policymakers in writing assessment, composition, and English education.
